

In the last report "Forecast\_No.3\_Dem\_will\_WIN", I was correct about Democrats taking the Senate Majority but wrong about the prediction that they would take the House as well. Once the Republicans have taken control of the House, they would initiate an impeachment bill against Joe Biden as President, however, the bill will never get passed when voted on in the Senate because it is controlled by the Democrats. The year 2023 will be a very messy year for the United States, which may later on be called the First Year of "the Divided States".

Now, let us move on to Victorian State Election on 26 November:

I do not believe the Labor party will win the election with a landslide as what happened in the last election in 2018 because quite a few of Victorian residents are NOT happy about the way the Labor party dealing with COVID-19 pandemic.

However, I think the Labor party will win the election with a smaller margin, and the worst case scenario for them is a labor minority government that teams up with the Greens and those so-called independent candidates.

Those independents are not independent at all. They are funded by powerful Climate Change Non-Governmental Entities, such as Climate 200.

For Mornington District, the independent candidate Dr Kate Lardner has done a fantastic job for public relation and political campaigning since early this year, and her Liberal Party opponent Mr Chris Crewther basically has not done much because actually he was only chosen to represent the Liberal Party in Mornington not long ago. In a word, Kate Lardner will WIN.

For Eildon District, there is no competition from the independent candidates. Even if a bit of redistricting changes have been made to favor the Labor Party, I still think Liberal Candidate Cindy McLeish will WIN.

For Caulfield District, this is a nail-biter, because it will be contested by three Jewish candidates: incumbent Liberal candidate David Southwick has done a great job for years, the independent candidate Nomi Kaltmann is unheard of but she is a lady, and the Labor Party candidate Lior Harel is a corporate lawyer. I think Liberal candidate David Southwick will WIN.
